Calendar description

Introduction to the historical, theoretical, and empirical underpinnings of community psychology. Examines the applications of psychology principles to social issues that affect communities. Special emphasis on community mental health, prevention of illness and promotion of wellness, and the community practitioner as an agent of social change.

Course Format

UBC Canvas is the primary method of contacting you for announcements, posting of instructor's notes for class, and posting of grades. You will need to log into the Canvas site through your CWL (Campus Wide Login) at <https://canvas.ubc.ca>

Please use the email above (not Canvas) for contacting me directly.

There is no required textbook for this class. Weekly readings are required, all available online. The online list of readings and videos is built into the left hand navigation of your Canvas course shell. You click on the button called 'Library Online Course Reserves.' This takes you to the LOCR program where you can login with your CWL in order to access all titles.

Attendance in class is expected. Regular student participation in class discussion is essential. Lecture material will present the theoretical framework work for class topics, and in-class, small group work is intended to facilitate our understanding. Not all group work will be announced in advance of the class. Students may be expected to react to issues in small groups and to report out. Assigned video viewing will complement readings.

Objectives and Learning Outcomes

In Community Psychology, we will explore the relationship between individuals and the communities in which they are embedded. Current readings will set the stage for both the broad principles and the detailed models by which to evaluate what community psychology is and its significant contributions to theory and practice.

As a result of this course, you will be able to:

- Place the theories and practices of community psychology in context
- Place yourself in the context of a community
- Identify and apply the principles of community psychology
- Identify research findings in community psychology that have implications for a wide range of community situations

Course Evaluation

Exams (75% of total grade)

There are three scheduled exams. Each is worth 25%

The exams are a combination of short and long answers and essay responses (no multiple choice questions).

There is no final exam during the official exam period.

Dates of tests: Sept 26

Oct 22

Nov 14

No make-up opportunities will be offered for missed exams. If you have a legitimate problem that prevents you from taking an exam, you must notify me, by phone, email or in person, of the circumstances, before the exam date, or as soon as possible after the date with a documented explanation of why you were unable to contact me earlier. Failure to notify me in a timely manner will result in a grade of zero for the missed test. Vacations, travel and work, for example, are not legitimate conflicts.

If an exam is missed for a valid, appropriately documented excuse (such as medical or compassionate leave) then exam material from the missed exam will be added in a separate section to the subsequent exam. Then, the weighting of the exams will be reconsidered by the professor. Students who feel that requests for consideration have not been dealt with fairly may take their concerns to Dr. Paul Davies, Head of Psychology.

If there happens to be a snowstorm or other unfavourable event that officially closes the University on a test day, the exam will automatically be given on the next class day.

Poster Assignment (15% of total grade)

We are presenting a symposium comprised of posters sessions on Nov 26. Attendance is mandatory.

The class will be divided into groups of four each, one group per poster. Each individual group will explore a community psychology issue/topic.

The sign-up for the poster groups will take place in stages: first, in late September, sign up related to general themes of interest will take place. Second, individual groups will then be assigned by the professor. There may be more than one four-person group assigned to the various general areas, but the actual assigned issue to be explored will become more specific once the groups are officially designated. Over the course of the term, there will be some pre-scheduled time allotted to meet in groups. On the symposium day, poster authors will take turns presenting their posters and you will also be assigned to rotate and judge your peers' posters. Peer judgment will be part of the final grade for the posters.

More detail about grading criteria and organization will be forthcoming.

Participation (10% of total grade)

The participation mark is a composite of three components: attendance in class on a regular basis, with the understanding that when you are in class you participate fully in the in-class group work; the quality of in-class participation in class discussions; peer-reviewed participation as assessed by your peers during the poster group work. Student self-assessment will also be taken into consideration for the participation mark.

Some important reminders and additional information

Academic Integrity

The academic enterprise is founded on honesty, civility, and integrity. As members of this enterprise, all students are expected to know, understand, and follow the codes of conduct regarding academic integrity. At the most basic level, this means submitting only original work done by you and acknowledging all sources of information or ideas and attributing them to others as required. This also means you should not cheat, copy, or mislead others about what is your work. Violations of academic integrity (i.e., misconduct) lead to the breakdown of the academic enterprise, and therefore serious consequences arise and harsh sanctions are imposed. For example, incidences of plagiarism or cheating may result in a mark of zero on the assignment or exam and more serious consequences may apply if the matter is referred to the President's Advisory Committee on Student Discipline. Careful records are kept in order to monitor and prevent recurrences.

A more detailed description of academic integrity, including the University's policies and procedures, may be found in the Academic Calendar at <http://okanagan.students.ubc.ca/calendar/index.cfm?tree=3,54,111,0>.

Grading Practices

Faculties, departments, and schools reserve the right to scale grades in order to maintain equity among sections and conformity to University, faculty, department, or school norms. Students should therefore note that an unofficial grade given by an instructor might be changed by the faculty, department, or school. Grades are not official until they appear on a student's academic record.
